IN AUTUMN.

The year grows splendid; on the mountain steep
New fancies long the warm and gorgeous light,
Dying by slow degrees into the deep,
Delicious night.

The fatal triumph of the perfect year,
Rises the woods' magnificent array;
Beyond, the purple mountain heights appear
And slope away.

The elm, with musical, slow motion, laves
His long, lithe branches on the tender air,
While from his top of gray, Sordello waves
His scarlet hair.

Where Spring first hid her violet 'neath the fern,
Where Summer's fingers opened, fold on fold,
The odorless, wild, red rose head, there now burn
The leaves of gold.

The lofiest hill—the lowliest flowering herb—
The fairest fruit of season and of clime—
All wear alike the mood of the superb
Autumnal clime.

Now nature pours her last and noblest wine
Like some Bacchante; beside the singing streams
Reclines enchanted day, wrapped in divine,
Impassioned dreams.

But where the painted leaves are falling fast,
Among the vines, beyond the farthest hill,
There sits a shadow—dim, and sad, and vast,
And lingers still.

And still we hear a voice among the hills,
A voice that means among the haunted wood,
And with the mystery of sorrow fills
The solitude.

For while gay Autumn glides the fruit and leaf,
The reaper whom your souls beseech in vain—
The loved lost year, which never may be found,
Or loved again.

Popular Miscellany.
JERUSALEM.

Of all the cities of the globe, Jerusalem has been the most memorable for its divine honors, in prophetic distinctions, and its misfortune. Its original name was Salem; its first king said to be Melchizedek; and the proposed offering of Isaac was said to have been on Mount Moriah, one of its three hills, afterward the site of the Temple. Jerusalem was conquered in the time of Joshua. Its history was thereafter a succession of sieges. It was recovered by the Canaanites, and taken and burned by Joshua, then captured by the Jebusites, and finally captured by David, in his restoration of the fallen glories of Israel. Its lofty position and evident strength determined the conqueror to make it his capital, and leaving Hebron, and removing the ancient seat of authority and residence of Saul, he fixed his throne in the citadel of the Jebusites, and named it the "City of David."

Jerusalem stands nearly central between the Mediterranean and the Jordan, thirty seven miles west of the former, and twenty-three west of the latter. David brought the ark within its gates with great pomp, and fixed the site of the temple on Mount Moriah; but the erection of the Temple was appointed to his still greater son. The reign of Solomon was the summit of Jewish grandeur, and the building of the Temple was the summit of the grandeur of Solomon. It was the most magnificent edifice ever raised by man; not merely for its position on the pinnacle of the sacred mountain, or for its noble architecture, but its splendor. Wherever gold, cedar or marble could be shown it was all gold, cedar, or marble.

When Solomon, in advanced years, fell into idolatry, evil was declared against Israel. The kingdom of David was shorn of its strength by the loss of the ten tribes and the civil war terminated only in their captivity. Judah still retained its royalty for 130 years longer, until the Assyrian invasion, when the city was stormed and the Temple was burned by Nebuchadnezzar, and lost its independence as a kingdom forever. Restored, after a captivity of seventy years in Babylon, it returned only an enfeebled vassalage and a ruined Temple—even saw its commonwealth recovered only to fall again; and after suffering the repeated oppressions of Syrians, Egyptians and Romans, finally perished as a nation by the Roman sword.

Yet the city was not wholly deserted but an attempt of the emperor, to make it a Roman fortress raised an insurrection which was extinguished in national blood, and concluded the national ruin.

For nearly two centuries more Jerusalem was forgotten by the world. At length, on the accession of Constantine to the imperial throne, the Empress Helena is presumed to have made a pilgrimage to the wreck of the city to discover the sites made memorable by the history of our Lord (A. D. 326.) Constantine repealed the edict excluding the Jews from entering Jerusalem, but he allowed their entrance only once in the year to weep over the destruction of the city. The ages of monarchism followed; and in the reign of Justinian—a man of whom history has scarcely yet decided whether he was a philosopher or a dupe, a warrior or a dastard, a restorer or a destroyer of empire—the site of Jerusalem was adorned on hand, and for sale at reasonable prices, Pure Ground Spices, Genuine Medicines, Chamisso Skins, Sponges, Tapioca, Pearl, Sago, and all articles in the drug line, at Another man don't take your paper—it is too small or too high priced, but he borrows and reads it regularly. And that could be called patronage, but the meanest kind.

Another man has had the paper a long time without payment, and becomes tired of it. He tells the postmaster he don't want that paper any more, and a copy comes back marked "refused." But he don't pay, oh, no! he has to keep the money to buy a city paper. Pay comes when you collect it according to law if you are able to collect it at all—such may be patronage, but it is a very dishonest and disreputable kind. We have had some of this kind, but their names have been erased from our list, and are not likely to be replaced. The less of such we have the better—they would break down any newspaper published.

Every subscriber should make it his business to call once a year and pay for his paper. By so doing he never has a large bill to pay and the paper is bound to succeed. Whether it be at the first or last of the year, he thus makes himself a true patron and friend, and gives substantial aid to the publisher.

No Bureau for Blunders.

A first-rate story is told of a very prominent man, who lived in Detroit forty years ago, and who, at that time, owned more steamboat stock than any other man in the Western country, besides other wealth to a large amount.

Like many of the pioneers who acquired great riches, he was very ignorant in all that books taught, but his learning was more like wisdom, and in common with many who have lived, and passed away, but left their mark behind them, he knew what tree would make shingles by looking at it.

He had at the time of our story, just completed a splendid new warehouse at Buffalo, and wanting a suitable clerk to take charge of it, he advertised for one in the papers. The next morning early, a candidate for the position presented himself, rather too flashy a young man in appearance, but the following conversation occurred:

"Young man, when you make a mistake in any of our books, how do you correct it?"

The young man explained, in a very profuse manner, how he should proceed to make it all right.

"A good way no doubt, to do it," replied the old man, "but I shan't want you."

Very soon another aspirant put in an appearance. A similar question was asked him, and in a long and eloquent manner he pointed out the remedy in all such cases.

All the reply was, "Young man, I shan't want you."

Some three or four others dropped in during the day, and to each one the same question was put, and they all had some smart way of covering up errors in their books.

The old gentleman was entirely ignorant himself of the art of book-keeping, but he had wisdom in all things, which is more than a match for learning.

Just at the close of the day a plainly-dressed man, with a bright eye and a brief, sharp call for the situation.

"Take a seat, sir," said the old gentleman, "I want to ask you just one question. When you make a false entry on your books, how do you go to work to correct it?"

Turning upon his questioner a cold, sharp look, the young man replied: "I don't make those kind of mistakes, sir."

"Ah! my dear sir, you are just the man I have been looking for all day," and in a few moments after, the man who corrected his blunders by not making them, was installed in the office.

The Dark Day in New England.

On the 19th of May, 1780, the inhabitants of New England and the adjacent parts were the trembling witnesses of a phenomenon never seen before or since, and which to this day remains unexplained. The year was celebrated for its numerous auroral exhibitions in this latitude. They covered the midnight heavens with coronations of red and silver, and streamed out like lightning, seeming, says one writer, fairly to flash warmth in the face. The winter preceding was marked by extraordinary severity. Snow lay on the ground from the middle of November to the middle of April. In December and January a storm continued for seven successive days, and the snow fell to a depth of four feet on a level in this single storm, and with drifts eight and ten feet high. Sheep were buried in the drifts for many days, and even men and animals perished with the cold. Long Island Sound was crossed by heavy artillery on the ice. Narragansett Bay froze over so hard that men traversed the ice from Providence to Newport in skating parties, and from Fall River to Newport, loads of wood were conveyed on the ice through Bristol Ferry.

Previous to the 19th a vapor filled the air for several days. Their was a smell of sulphur. The morning of the 19th was overcast with some clouds, and rain fell over the country, with lightning and thunder. Scarcely any motion was in the air; what wind there was came from the south west. By nine o'clock in the forenoon, without previous warning, the darkness stole gradually on, with a luminous appearance near the horizon, as if the obscuring cloud had dropped down from overhead. There was a yellowish glow of the atmosphere that made clear silver assume a grass-green hue. Then a dense, undulating vapor settled rapidly and without aerial movement over all the land and ocean from Pennsylvania to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the darkness it caused sinking by degrees until the sunlight was effectually shut out. Ordinary clock it was not. The rapidity with which so large an extent of country was enveloped precludes the possibility of supposing this to have been a natural cloud moving laterally.

Besides this, the day was too calm to imagine such a thing. Down came the darkness thicker and thicker. By ten o'clock the air was loaded with thick gloom. The heavens were tinged with a yellowish or faint red; the lurid look increased; few, if any, ordinary clouds were visible. The sun, in disappearing, took on a brassy hue. The lurid, brassy color spread everywhere, above and below. The grass assumed the color of the sky, and all outdoors wore a sickly, weird and melancholy aspect—a dusky appearance, as if seen through a smoked glass. By eleven o'clock it was as night itself, and from this time until three in the afternoon the darkness was extraordinary and frightful.

The extent of the darkness was greater than is related of any other similar phenomenon on record, not excepting the celebrated dark days over Egypt and Judea. It reached south to the northern half of Pennsylvania, and from thence along the coast northeast to the wilds of Maine, eastward to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and out as far as 120 miles southeast of Boston, and undoubtedly much farther; west to the valleys of Lake Champlain and the Hudson River, and into undefined regions in Canada. Portland, Boston, Hartford, New York, West Point, and Albany were affected by it. But the degree of the darkness differed in different places, and the extent of land and sea 800 miles in length and 400 miles in breadth, embracing an area of 320,000 square miles, was known to be covered by the cloud, and so far as can be ascertained, a population of 700,000 souls sat for a portion of the day and night in a gloom more or less profound and inexplicable.

How did that homely girl contrive to get married? It is not unfrequently remarked of some good domestic creature whom her husband regards as the apple of his eye, and in whose plain face he sees something better than beauty. Pretty girls who are vain of their charms, are rather prone to make observations of this kind; and consciousness of the fact that flowers of loveliness are often to pine on the stem, while weeds of homeliness go off readily, is no doubt in many cases at the bottom of the sneering question. The truth is, that most men prefer homeliness and amiability to beauty and caprice. Handsome women are sometimes very hard to please. They are apt to over-value themselves, and in waiting for an immense bid, occasionally overstep the market. Their plain sisters, on the contrary, aware of their personal deficiencies, generally lay themselves out to produce an agreeable impression, and in most instances succeed. They don't aspire to capture paragons with princely fortunes, but are willing to take anything respectable.

There is no greater mistake a young man can make than that of being falling in love with the interests of his employer. It must be admitted, that there are "pleasant places" under which is concealed an employer's business; but let him see that it is worth a trial.

The long sleep of death does not mean, and the short sleep of our life our waking. Sleep is the half of time that counts.
